20 Important Christians You Should Follow on Social Media

Meg Bucher

Crosswalk.com Contributing Writer

1. Beth Moore

Especially after the hearts of women longing to break free from sin and strongholds, Beth's heart is authentically seeking to tell of the same love for Jesus that set her free. She will respond on Twitter, which breaks down barriers between the message that God lays on her heart to reach specific people. We all know that God brings people into our lives on purpose, and Beth is someone who takes her responsibility seriously. The love she extends is reflective of the Savior she serves. In a world that is drowning in impersonal communication, it's a joy to see someone pull away from the pack and be personal on Twitter.

"This book thrills me!" she says of the Bible in a recent podcast. It's evident.
